New Mexico Tribal Infrastructure Fund Board Makes Historical Investment in New Mexico Tribal Communities

Over $26 Million Awarded to Critical Projects

SANTA FE – The New Mexico Indian Affairs Department on Friday announced that more than $26 million was awarded to 17 infrastructure projects across nine tribal communities by the Tribal Infrastructure Fund (TIF) Board.

This investment builds on the historic infrastructure investments in tribal communities made under the Lujan Grisham Administration, with the administration having invested more than $240 million for critical infrastructure projects to bring running water, electricity, and broadband to tribal communities throughout New Mexico, orders of magnitude more than any prior state administration.

This year's TIF awards is the highest amount of funding going out to tribal communities since the TIF program was established.

The Tribal Infrastructure Act, which created the Tribal Infrastructure Fund Board in 2005, accepts proposals from tribal communities to fund critical infrastructure projects in tribal communities. The nine-member board thoroughly evaluates and scores each project proposal to ensure projects are shovel-ready and can begin immediately. The New Mexico Indian Affairs Department administers the funds.

“We will continue to step up and deliver meaningful investments to tribal communities all across our state,” said Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham. “This is what my administration does – we look for opportunities to build and rebuild communities, and we get the job done, no matter what has or hasn’t been done in the past. These funds will make a real, significant difference for families, workers and for economic development and quality of life on tribal land in New Mexico. I’m really proud of that and humbled to have the opportunity to continue to strengthen sacred government-to-government partnerships with the sovereign nations of New Mexico.”

"This newest investment in tribal infrastructure continues to build upon the historic amount of funding that has gone to tribal infrastructure projects. The Indian Affairs Department remains committed to working with our tribal communities to get these funds out the door, so these projects can be completed and make a real difference in the lives of our tribal members. Thank you to Governor Lujan Grisham and our Legislators for their continued support of the Tribal Infrastructure Fund," said Secretary Lynn Trujillo.

"We appreciate the TIF board for recognizing the infrastructure needs of our communities, especially those that will benefit our elders and disabled. I extend my appreciation to Navajo Nation Division of Community Development Executive Director Dr. Pearl Yellowman for her support and advocacy as a TIF board member and members of the 24th Navajo Nation Council. We have a great partnership with the State of New Mexico, and we want to strengthen that partnership through the completion of these projects," said Navajo Nation President Jonathan Nez.

"On behalf of the Tribe, I want to thank the State of New Mexico and the Tribal Infrastructure Board for this award. The money will go toward repairing a heavily traveled and dangerous road that is used mainly by residents and school buses. The Tribe would not have been able to move forward without this money. Public safety is a priority for the Tribe - we are grateful," Mescalero Apache Tribe President Gabe Aguilar.

"The Tribal Infrastructure Funds announced by the State are greatly appreciated and will be a very important part of the effort to allow the Pueblo of Santa Ana to continue to provide for the health and welfare of its community as we emerge from the COVID pandemic," said Pueblo of Santa Ana Governor Ulysses Leon.
